the antique dealers.I've dealt with them a lot and they're a good bunch.A coin dealer did tell us to take them to a scrap metal dealer.Heh, which one? It's illegal to destroy Australian coins, a criminal offence under the Crimes (Currency) Act 1981 to deface or destroy an Australian coin. cluster2 writes...It's illegal to destroy Australian coins.Yes the coin dealer did say he hadn't told us to do that :) I wonder if these machines accept slightly damaged $1 coins, like not perfectly round at the edges.I walked up to a staff member and I asked him whether I can change the damaged coin to an undamaged one. He said I have to be a customer of the bank to do that. However when I went to another bank which I am also not a customer of, they were happy to do it. Never again will I ever be a customer of CBA after he said that. Hot Monster writes...I wonder if these machines accept slightly damaged $1 coins, like not perfectly round at the edges.to a point ...should not have trouble with service at Coles/Woolworths for their machines for customer service Hot Monster writes...Never again will I ever be a customer of CBA after he said that.Banks are not a public service. Why would you go to a bank you are not a customer of and expect free service.What you should have done is refuse to receive the damaged coin in the first place. It is hard to do, but it is a case of passing a problem onto someone else. Zed Surreal writes...Banks are not a public servicetechnically they are when to comes to reserve bank tender coins and cash .. Zed Surreal writes...Banks are not a public service.Correct. They did advise a time and day to go in when it's quiet.May not help everyone but hopefully it will help someone.I also know it's not MSE to save money at home but it's been a bit of fun watching it build up and guessing how much would be in there when we got to the top.
