Their relative ease of use, stackable design and low cost have all attributed to the success of the product line. Yet, in today's world of high-speed DSL lines and bandwidth-intensive applications, simple hubs are having a harder time delivering the performance they once did. Many owners have started replacing their older hubs with more efficient network switches. (If you're not clear about the difference between a hub and a switch and a router, check the bridge types.) In light of this trend, 3COM is adding a number of dual switches to its OfficeConnect family of products, such as the 3Com OfficeConnect 5 Port Dual Speed Switch. With a list price of $109 and road prices starting at $79, the OfficeConnect 5 Port Dual Speed Switch is a bargain. In addition to the highly respected and reliable 3COM name you get a quality switch that is easy to install and configure as your favorite home appliances. Installing this OfficeConnect no longer required you to unpack the drive and connect it to our network devices (installations, servers, etc.). The stackable design makes them ideal for home and small business environments and connecting lights easy to read means that you can The status of your network with a single look. If the 5-door switch does not offer you the capacity you are looking for, an 8 and 16-door version is also available. As well as the original OfficeConnect products were, some users have still had problems installing them. If it were the only network hub Normally you wouldn't do it No problem. If you were trying to connect the unit to another hub, you need to connect the hubs using a crossover cable that had to be installed on the UPLINK port (usually port 8). A mechanical switch (MDI / MDIX) has changed the operation of the UPLINK port to make it compatible with the crossover cable. This procedure, even if simple in theory, could be a bit confusing, especially for new users. However, this new generation of OfficeConnect switches uses automatic detection ports that automatically detect the type of cable and the speed of the attached device, so you don't need to waste time playing with cables. Another unique feature of the OfficeConnect is a process called priority queuing. According to 3Com, it is a method to ensure that priority traffic is propagated along the network with more emergency so normal traffic. With this capacity in position, streaming services, such as voice and video traffic, are delivered before network traffic, optimizing the image and quality of sound. Without this capacity, the operation of these services would only depend on the load on the network. So if traffic levels are high, suffers from performance. Performance I run the standard QCheck suite, to test the performance, with the following results: QCheck Test Description Transfer Rate (MBPS) [1 MB Data Size] QCheck Time Response (MSEC) [10 Iterations 100byte Data Size] QCheck UDP Stream [10 seconds at 500kbps] (actual throughput-kbps) (lost-%) client to client 94.118 à, 1 (AVG) 1 (maximum) 498.572 À ¢ à, ~ 0% (details on how tested can be found Here.) Summary the OfficeConnect products have always been exceptional the values and this last offer seems to maintain that tradition. If you are in the market for a low-cost switch, do yourself a favor to yourself and give an officeconnect an attempt. Eric Geier is a freelance technical writer.
