It is my belief, Watson, based on my experience, that the lower and most vilestrious streets of London do not have a record more terrible than sin than the smiling and beautiful countryside." "You horrible me!" "But the reason is very evident. The pressure of public opinion can do in the city what the law cannot accomplish. There is no such vile lane that the url of a tortured child, or the deaf of the blow of a drunkard, does not combine sympathy and indignation between the neighbors, and then the whole machine of justice is always so close that a word of complaint can make it go, and there is only one step between crime and the basin.
