A couple of days ago, we were faced with a problem that seemed extremely simple. A large presentation (300 MB) had been created on an iPad, and we need access to an Android phone for sharing. In the old days, when everyone has worked on a laptop or a desktop computer, there were too many ways to share files - you may have transferred them to shared folders on the local network, enter the files to a USB pen drive or made a wireless network to -HOC to transfer files. But iOS in particular does not make this process too simple, and while some Android devices support USB On-the-Go (OTG) with which you can connect a pen directly to the phone, not all devices have this function. You can use Airdrop to share files between iOS devices and Android users have the Android radius, but what do you do when you're trying to manage an iPad and an Android phone? In the event that the attempt is blocked to move the files between an iOS device and a Windows Phone device, we have already covered you with a guide. Read on to learn more about sharing files between iOS and Android. They were considering the ways to send the file or upload the file to Dropbox so that it can be downloaded again on the phone, we are fortunately learned that there are many apps that there are many apps designed to solve exactly the problem we are facing. While there are many different options outside, our favorite is to use an app called Zarapya, which is free both on iTunes and on Google Play.This is how it works: First, install the app on both devices. Following the connections given above. Singular that both devices are connected to the same Wi-Fi network. The app installed the app, start it on both devices. On the Android device, tap Create Group.ora, tap the Menu button (three horizontal lines) at the top right and touch Connect the à €
