Nih grant reporter search. Nih reporter advanced search.

While the main ClinicalTrials.gov page offers a basic search form, we recommend that you explore the Find Studies section for the following search options and instructions: The search results interface offers many features so you can customize your display. Once you fine-tune a search to your liking, you can Subscribe to Search Results or use the Download button. Also consider the advanced data analysis techniques at Downloading Content for Analysis or the ClinicalTrials.gov API beta test. Consult the ClinicalTrials.gov Questions and Answers for more information. RePORTER search results show you lists of projects and names of funded researchers. Similar Program Officials button This gives you a graph of relevant institutes as well as a table of NIH program officers ranked by the number of relevant projects in their portfolios. Estimates of Funding for Various Research, Condition, and Disease Categories (RCDC) helps you find the annual support level for each category of research. If you have an eRA Commons account, you can use eRA's LikeThis (A Thesaurus-Based Search Tool) to find funded projects and publications as well. It will return publications associated with extramural or intramural funded projects. For a working example, use this Search for Active NIAID Projects. Both Matchmaker and LikeThis leverage RePORTER data, so try both and see which you like best. Share your feedback or questions with RePORT@mail.nih.gov. Matchmaker allows you to enter scientific text (such as a project abstract) and choose either of these options: Similar Projects button Use the resulting list of projects to work out which institute and study section to target, or names of others in the field to connect with. Keep in mind that if a study section code begins with "Z", then the study section was a Special Emphasis Panel and you cannot request this option in your application. Here's how to use NIH databases to learn about emerging trends in funded research—and potentially find new collaborators, too. RePORTER's Publications Search feature lets you enter a comma-separated list of PubMed IDs (PMID) or PubMed Central IDs (PMC ID). Search ClinicalTrials.gov Because ClinicalTrials.gov shares public information about all NIH-funded clinical trials, you can search for other researchers' projects to uncover new developments in clinical research and find potential collaborators. As one example, here are Search Results for Clinical Trials Related to COVID-19 or SARS-CoV-2. RePORT for the Big Picture NIH's RePORT site lets you access and refine interactive charts and reports that are connected to multiple NIH data sources. RePORTER for Specifics The NIH RePORTER search form is your gateway into NIH's free database of funded projects, investigators, publications, and patents. You may spot research areas that are underrepresented or highly supported. @NIHgrants 02/03/2022 - 11:18 @KDNyhan @tshields We highlight trans-NIH RfIs, and other NIH grant policy news, in our blog, the Extramural Nexus... Staying at the cutting edge involves more than just keeping up with the journals and attending scientific conferences. NIH assigns research to the relevant categories based on the text you use in your applications. Awards by Location and Organization shows you year-by-year NIH funding by institution, state, and congressional district. Learn more at RePORT Frequently Asked Questions. If you drill down far enough through the RCDC site options described above, you'll end up in the RePORTER system. Click the number in the Projects column to see the list of awards. RePORTER will match your terms with projects and sort them by relevance. You can also use the Advanced Projects Search form or the Publications Search for additional options. NIH's Research Portfolio Online Reporting Tools (RePORT) site offers many reports on NIH spending, as well as two key tools for you to explore: Research, Condition, and Disease Categories (RCDC) and RePORTER. You may also Write to the Help Desk. Review project summaries, see the results on a map, or use the other tabs on the search results for links to PubMed Central publications and iEdison patent information. To see active projects broken out by NIH institute or center, use RePORTER's Browse NIH option. Understand NIAID Research Priorities Save Your RePORT Work Download or share your RePORT or RePORTER search results using controls on the upper right for each table or visualization. NIH's RePORTER API allows advanced users to write computational procedures to retrieve award data. This can be a great way to get a snapshot of your field and look for potential collaborators or competitors. RCDC includes over a decade of data and uses projections for the current fiscal year. The single Quick Search field on the main RePORTER page accepts all sorts of information, e.g., the area of research, name of an investigator, or a specific organization. NIH Data Book reports on extramural grants and contracts, awardee organizations, trainees and fellows, and the national biomedical workforce.
