Keep all dangerous substances away from a free play area. You need to know your child is safe so free exploration can take place. Organize the toys and have them in a safe, accessible spot. Giving children the right play materials and the right environment to play in embraces the principles of holistic development. Parents need to allow their little ones time to explore and become familiar with their surroundings. Spiritual Development Talk about family morals and values, beliefs and traditions. Share ideas - 'brainstorm' solutions. Rather choose a few at a time and change the contents of the toy basket every so often. Starting in the early years, the holistic approach to education is about a balance between the home, the environment and the developing child. 1. It is non-threatening and the environment surrounding play is engaging. Avoid these kinds of toys particularly with your very young toddler. Emotional understanding - learning to express emotions in a healthy way. Intellectual Development Active participation is by far the best form of education. It is very important that when creating a realistic holistic environment, as many of the individual aspects are included in activities. Being aware of the five components of holistic development makes it easier for parents to implement the all-round benefits of this concept. However, this is the way children learn for several years. The value of play in creating a holistic environment is huge. Get your copy of the Learning Through Play Activity Pack for only $27. The creativity box can be on standby for making things when your child is ready for some creativity. A toy basket is a good idea so the toys can be put away easily at 'tidy-up time.' Don't have too many toys out at once. This outing is not just about going on a picnic. Watch out for sharp edges or pointed dangerous toys. A family picnic is full of opportunities to include social and emotional development while organising and helping with the picnic. Games at the picnic add to intellectual and gross motor development and a day of interacting with family is a great social-emotional activity. Added to the picnic experience is time to connect to the outdoors, explore nature and show respect for the environment by not littering. In this way the picnic ticks all the boxes for organizing a holistic educational experience. The following are the five key areas of holistic development: Physical development - all about growing and developing motor skills. Social skills - how children interact with others and communicate in their world. Emotional understanding - learning to express emotions in a healthy way. Intellectual development - cognitive, creativity and acquiring skills for learning. Spiritual development - building morals, values and caring for the world. Activities That Do Not Foster Holistic Learning Activities that are restrictive or sedentary are not going to allow for holistic development. Broadly speaking, children need to have the freedom to be actively involved in their surroundings. Social Skills Build social skills by connecting your child with other children and adults. Practise actions like sharing, taking turns, enjoying a meal together or going on an outing. These five little ideas will keep you focused on creativity with positive reinforcement. Your child is like a little sponge just waiting to absorb every word you say. Make sure the flooring is level, with some protective covering. It could be rubber matting or carpeting but something to protect your child for the inevitable hard falls. Have a thorough knowledge of the importance of motor skills and how they are developed. Engage in gross motor activities or big movements and explore ways to climb, jump, swing and run. This is especially true for books. How to Support the Holistic Development of A Child Encouraging holistic development in the early years is the responsibility of parents and educators. Share experiences and discuss the outcomes of events. Play and Learn The idea of playing and learning may seem contradictory. Point to objects, repeat words and phrases and allow your little learner to imitate you all the time. 3. 2. Social skills - how children interact with others and communicate in their world. 4. Creating an Environment for Holistic Development The parts that make up holistic education do not take place individually. Never fear, you may be surprised at how easy it is to find something that ticks the holistic box to do. Activities should help a child to develop cognitively as well as socially and emotionally. A child's home and environment also impact their overall development. While it may be easy to default to focusing on a child's intellectual abilities during the early years, it is equally important for a child to develop skills such as: emotional intelligence, confidence, social ability, compassion, fine and gross motor coordination, responsibility, creativity and many other skills! Holistic development is important and is the key to learning in the early years of childhood. Si vous continuez à naviguer sur ce site, vous acceptez l'utilisation de cookies. Holistic development means developing the whole child - socially, emotionally, physically, intellectually and spiritually. Taking this approach to your children's education is not difficult and just requires a little thought. Participate in the community and branch out whenever possible. Why is Holistic Development Important? Emotional Development Create awareness of others through books and stories. Learn empathy at home and in the community. The creative thinker solves problems, develops new ideas and is innovative. Creative ideas are part of mathematical thinking, science, and technology - in fact, anything that has new ideas. Think out of the box yourself and provide dress-up clothes for drama days, or go on a picnic or treasure hunt, make homemade musical instruments or decorate biscuits in the kitchen. The area of creativity is limitless and most enjoyable. Show your child how to turn pages and not to tear the paper of lovely storybooks. Be aware of children's emotional needs. Check on the size, not too small with spare parts that can be a choking hazard or too large and unmanageable. An Example of a Holistic Activity Try to plan activities from a holistic viewpoint. Set up your child's bedroom or play area intentionally and encourage your child to respect and enjoy his belongings. Get more info here. Have interesting 'hands-on' types of materials available. Activities that are not interactive or hands-on tend to veer away from the holistic approach of development in the early years. This may seem a bit daunting, but simply think 'It's all about me!' Your child learning from within, to deal with the outside world and grow into a sociable, confident, caring human being appreciating the world around them. Wondering what holistic development means and what you as a parent can do to support your child's growth? Intellectual development - cognitive, creativity and acquiring skills for learning. Everything you do, from learning to play, is an aspect of learning that children enjoy. Buy your toys wisely. It is wise to check what materials they are made with for parts that can fall off or are peeling and breaking. What is Holistic Development in Early Childhood? Guiding some ideas and being supportive is another important part of encouraging creativity. Be creative yourself. Arrange equipment so there is enough run around space between items. Creativity is not limited to artistic endeavour. It is important, in the holistic development of the young child, to find ways to try and experiment with new and different materials. They need to develop their fine and gross motor skills. As a parent or teacher, you can start your children on an early learning path to success. Watch the video below for a short summary of holistic development or read on to find out more. Are you stuck for ideas? Children need a safe area where they can explore freely and actively. Here are some points to consider when creating that safe area for play activities. Keep the five elements in mind and go ahead and organize family outings, fun at home in the kitchen, friends over for playdates, and creative waste invention days. Ask yourself if your plan helps with: Personal development – all about growing and developing motor skills. In his book, ‘Oh the places you’ll go.’ Dr Seuss wrote: “Step with great care and great tact,Remember life’s a great balancing act!And will you succeed?Yes! You will indeed (98 and ¾ percent guaranteed!)”Dr Seuss Would you like a year of done-for-you, ten-minute activities to teach your 3-5-year-old through play? Language skills help children with self-expression, communication and socializing. A child who can communicate is confident and ready to learn new things and explore new areas. Always add words of encouragement, never criticism. If your play area is outside it should be a fenced area for safety and security. Enriching language should come naturally. Or shop for instantly downloadable and printable kids’ activities and games. Ask questions about the creation and how it came to be made. Put together a creativity box with paper, pencils and crayons, stickers, duct tape, glue and some recycle items like toilet rolls and used cardboard. Physical Development Understand the physical milestones children will experience. In particular, look out for any kind of water hazard. Spiritual development – morals, values and caring for the world. Develop a sense of self and responsibility towards others Teach children to take care of the environment outside of the home. Foster language development by verbalizing your actions, playing games, going on walks and pointing out the scenery, sharing picture books and stories and singing rhymes and songs together. Creating a safe play environment with the right educational toys and resources is important too. The Safe Play Environment Knowing you have a safe environment for your child to play in is a very important aspect of holistic education. Parents need to have peace of mind when it comes to the activities their children are engaged in. This may seem challenging at first, but in actual fact, many activities are naturally inclusive of these principles. Look at the family picnic as an example of a holistic activity. Encouraging Creativity Thinking creatively is a skill that will help your child to get ahead in all sorts of situations. 5.
